I interned with an English teacher. More than simply an exchange of languages, there was an exchange of cultures. The students were curious about how the U.S. differs from Chile, and they loved answering questions about their country. I had a great experience, and suggest it to anyone thinking about a teaching career.

Teaching English Abroad

Studying abroad is an adventure that builds self-confidence, valuable skills, and global perspectives on your major. In the field of education, we offer specialized, cost-effective programs that emphasize international teaching experience and bilingualism—a great fit for education minors. Explore these stunning destinations in the Spanish-speaking world.

CHILE • Pontifical Catholic University of Chile
Access a wide range of courses in teaching methods for all fields (the university has its own education major). For instance, take a seminar on teaching science to elementary schoolchildren, or intern directly with teachers.
Internships are available in schools of all levels throughout Santiago.

MEXICO • Field Research Program
Work one-on-one with a specialist at the Universidad Pedagógica de Oaxaca. Professor Patricia Mena specializes in sociolinguistics and bilingual education, also supervises research on questions of gender, education, migration, and ethnicity.
Research and internship placements are available in classrooms in local communities.

SPAIN • University of Granada
The education department has an excellent program in Primary Education Teacher Training that offers an entire curriculum in English as well as many courses in Spanish.
An emphasis on bilingualism makes this a welcoming opportunity for California students.

SPAIN • Autonomous University of Barcelona
This is a complete program in education with a variety of coursework in theory and pedagogy. Specialization in Early Childhood and Primary Education offers a number of courses in English.
Internship placements are available in primary education classrooms.

UCEAP is the University of California's premier study abroad program. All the benefits of home—UC credit, grades, and financial aid—travel with you. We invite you to see the world, become a global citizen, and get on UC's track to success.
